Characteristics of a scientist

A great scientist has the confidence and competence in the full range of practical skills, taking the initiative in, for example, planning and carrying out scientific investigations.

A Scientist take risks

In order to find out new ways, methods, and fields of study, some risks need to be taken. Scientists should be ready to change all their prototype and pursue new lines of inquiry if the evidences lead to it.

The ability to undertake practical work in a variety of contexts, including fieldwork.

A scientist has the passion for science and its application in past, present and future technologies.

High levels of originality, imagination or innovation in the application of skills.

The ability to think independently and raise questions about working scientifically and the knowledge and skills that it brings.

Confidence and competence in the full range of practical skills, taking the initiative in, for example, planning and carrying out scientific investigations.